Dear INTERPOL,

I am writing to bring to your attention information regarding Luo Fanghong (罗方泓), also known online as "Dark Lord", a Chinese national born in 1998 who has been publicly identified by animal welfare activists as a central figure in a network allegedly responsible for the production and distribution of extreme cat torture content.

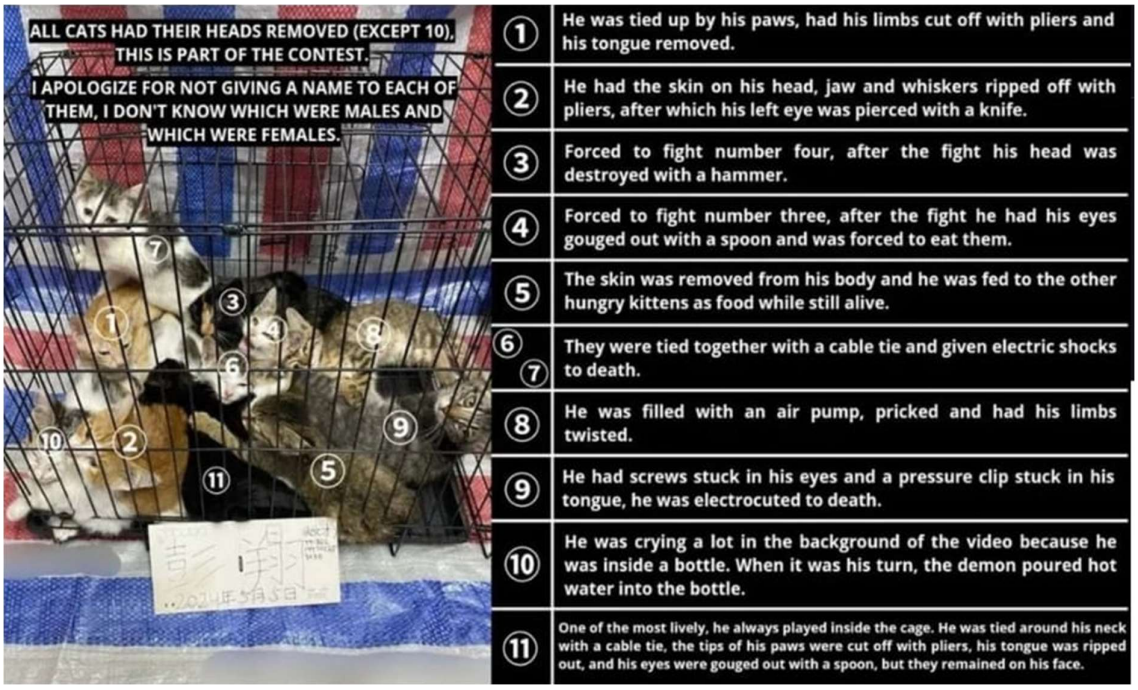

According to information gathered and shared by animal protection organizations and activists, Luo Fanghong is reportedly employed in the Medical Technology Department of Bo'ai Hospital in Zhongshan City, Guangdong Province, China, a healthcare institution specializing in maternal and child health services.

On 19 October 2026, Luo Fanghong was reportedly apprehended by law enforcement authorities in Zhongshan following an investigation conducted by Chinese activists and animal welfare organizations. Reports indicate that he is currently in police custody or under investigation.

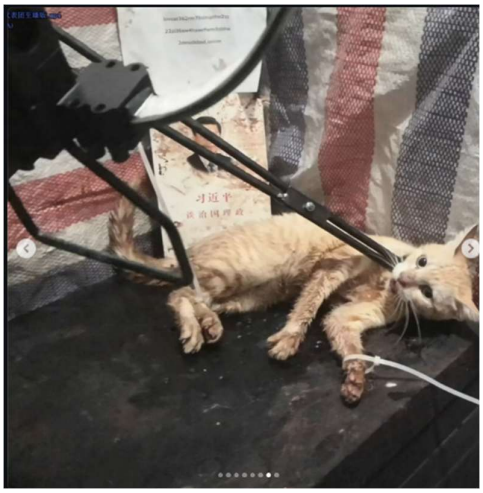

Luo Fanghong has been widely identified as a principal producer of graphic cat abuse material. The allegations against him describe prolonged and systematic acts of extreme cruelty toward cats, including the torture and killing of large numbers of cats for entertainment and online distribution. These allegations include reports of mutilation, dissection, electrocution, burning, and other forms of deliberate abuse.

Particularly disturbing are acts involving mother cats and their kittens. According to multiple reports, Luo Fanghong allegedly killed kittens in the presence of their mothers and intentionally subjected the animals to prolonged suffering. Additional reports claim that pregnant cats were targeted and that unborn kittens were removed from the womb during acts of abuse. These actions demonstrate an exceptional level of cruelty and sadistic behavior.

What makes this case especially concerning is that Luo Fanghong reportedly works within the healthcare sector and has access to environments dedicated to the care of vulnerable individuals, including women and children. While there is currently no public evidence indicating that he has harmed any human being, the alleged pattern of extreme violence toward animals, combined with his professional position in a medical institution, raises serious concerns regarding public safety and professional suitability.

It is important to note that, at present, China does not have comprehensive national legislation that specifically criminalizes acts of animal cruelty toward companion animals. As a result, individuals accused of severe animal abuse are often investigated under unrelated public-order offenses rather than animal-protection laws.

According to reports, Luo Fanghong is currently being held under the charge of "picking quarrels and provoking trouble" rather than for animal cruelty itself. If these reports are accurate, it is possible that his detention will be temporary and that he may be released after a relatively short period of administrative detention, despite the seriousness of the allegations against him. This raises concerns that he could potentially resume employment, travel internationally, or seek work in healthcare settings outside China in the future.

I respectfully request that any relevant information regarding this individual be appropriately recorded and shared with competent authorities where legally permissible. Should he seek employment, residency, or professional opportunities outside China in the future, authorities may benefit from being aware of the allegations, investigations, and publicly reported conduct associated with his case.

The purpose of this communication is not to determine guilt or innocence, which remains the responsibility of the relevant legal authorities, but rather to ensure that information regarding an individual accused of exceptionally severe acts of animal cruelty is available for appropriate review and consideration by international law enforcement agencies.
